

Christi Lategan is a Professional Urban and Regional Planner with more than 15 years of experience in urban planning, land management, human settlements, and economic development across South Africa. Registered with the South African Council for Planners (SACPLAN), she has successfully led and contributed to large-scale integrated development projects in both the public and private sectors.

Currently Christi serves as Unit Manager: Land Management at Sibanye-Stillwater, where she oversees extensive land portfolios and supports transformative initiatives focused on sustainable economic development and post-mining land use. Her work includes renewable energy developments, agricultural programmes, and strategic land partnerships that contribute to long-term regional growth.

Passionate about creating sustainable, inclusive, and economically viable communities, Christi combines technical expertise with a collaborative leadership style to deliver innovative planning solutions that create lasting value for clients, communities, and stakeholders.
